What We Do

The Institute for Restorative Justice and Restorative Dialogue (IRJRD) partners with schools to create a whole school “climate change” through the use of restorative practices.

Our Training Team

The Restorative Practices Facilitators on our training team come from diverse backgrounds and reflect a variety of experiences related to schools. They are encouraging, inviting, available and responsive. Skilled in guiding restorative processes, they are able to connect with teachers in the classroom and with families in the school community.

Why Train With Us

IRJRD is a pioneer in bringing restorative practices to Texas schools. Led by experts in the field, we are committed to providing Best Practices and trainings that reflect restorative justice principles.

WINTER 2019 TRAININGS IN AUSTIN

Teacher Training - January 3 - 4 @ UT Austin

This training provides a values-based approach to behavior management that deepens relationships with and between students, enhances character development, and promotes belonging and community in the classroom. Teachers are equipped with the fundamentals of Tier I Restorative Practices for use in the classroom, such as circle development for a variety of purposes, the role of circle keeper, and creating a restorative classroom environment. This training has direct relevance to meeting TEA’s goals for T-TESS specific to Classroom Environment, Routines and Procedures, Managing Student Behavior and School Community involvement. Participants earn 13 hours Continuing Professional Education credit.

Restorative Discipline Coordinator Training - January 7 - 11 @ UT Austin

This comprehensive 5-day training delineates the scope of the Coordinator’s role in implementing a successful whole-school model at the district or campus level and provides skills-based learning at all 3 levels of Behavioral Support including community building circles, restorative chats, family group conferencing, and construction of meaningful agreements to assure accountability. Participants learn strategies for including and working with key stakeholder groups in the school community including administrators, teachers, and families. The training develops awareness of key behavioral influences such as personal trauma, the impact of disproportionality on equitable responses to student behavior, bullying, and cultural gaps between students and teachers. Participants earn 32.5 hours Continuing Professional Education credit.
